

Picture This

For students, a bridge to hospital careers

Photos by Monica Lopossay | Sun Photographer
July 14, 2008

The group gathered to watch a demonstration at St. Joseph Medical Center. (Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

The Bridges Program took students on a field trip to St. Joseph Medical Center, where they learned how to apply bandages and perform minor operations. The St. Paul's School program offers Baltimore students continued summer learning in classroom and field settings

(Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

Dejah Samuel reacts as she begins to stitch up a chicken thigh at St. Joseph Medical Center. The procedure is part of a program designed to allow city students to experience what it would be like to work in a hospital setting

(Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

Joseph Benson smiles before he practices stitching technique on a chicken thigh at St. Joseph Medical Center.

(Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

Ayana Brownson tries on a medical mask at St. Joseph Medical Center.

(Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

Dejah Samuel (left), Jamia Rikard and Ayana Brownson proudly display their successfully sutured chicken thigh at St. Joseph Medical Center.

(Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

Students receive bandage training on their various fake injuries at St. Joseph Medical Center.

(Sun photo by Monica Lopossay / July 8, 2008)

Jahi Jaramogi closely watches as doctors in the catheterization laboratory run tests on a patient.

