

Bridges cleans up Armistead Gardens during Project Clean Stream

April 10, 2010

On Saturday, April 10, Bridges students, families, staff and RBC Weekend mentors came together for a morning of service as part of Project Clean Stream, a statewide volunteer driven initiative to help preserve the greater Chesapeake Bay Watershed. Bridges' sixty volunteers worked in the Armistead Gardens community, giving a combined 150 hours purging the wooded area of everything from the top of a truck, to bicycles, car tires, and engine parts. After the clean-up, Herring Run's Ashley Traut led a nature walk through the park that reinforced the importance of conserving green space, and the value it can bring to a community.

Volunteers close the day with a picture on top of the dumpster they filled over the course of the day's clean-up.

Volunteers working together to ferry trash out of the stream.

Dominic and Brett team up to remove an unusual piece of trash found in the park.

Nia and Kiya show off their latest find.

Weekend mentor Phil Keller with Bridges students and family.